

Quok till you drop

Feel the warm and fuzzies at Walpole, WA

Keen on a spot of voluntourism? Help protect threatened native Australian marsupials like the quokka, quoll and quenda in the unspoilt Walpole Wilderness Area of south-west WA. Not only will you cradle cute critters, you'll also survey the area for suitable habitat, radio tag the marsupials, follow their every movement and study their habits. You don't need to be a scientist to help out either, as much of the biological data collection consists of simple tasks and during your week-long trip you'll learn all you need to help. Visit biosphere-expeditions.org to sign up.

